Public perceptions of the impartiality and trustworthiness of the BBC

Wave 2

July 2014
Public trust in the BBC
The following data comes from a nationally representative survey by Kantar Media for the BBC. This is an on-going monthly survey of c1,000 UK adults per month that allows us to gauge public opinion of the BBC on a regular basis.

As part of this survey, Kantar Media has been tracking public perceptions of trust and general impression of the BBC since 2004.

Respondents are asked to rate the following statements:

- ‘I trust the BBC’ and give a score on a scale of 1 to 10 where 1 is strongly disagree and 10 is strongly agree.
- ‘Thinking about the BBC as a whole – not just the programmes, but the sort of organisation the BBC is and the way it goes about providing a public broadcasting service. Overall, what do you think of the BBC? On a scale of 1 to 10, where 1 means extremely unfavourable and 10 means extremely favourable, please tell me your general impression of the BBC’

The BBC publishes the average general impression score for the year in its Annual Report.

Given events in recent years, we are also publishing a breakdown of general impression scores plus the trust scores on a quarterly basis from 2004 onwards.
People’s trust has shown some recovery since autumn 2012 though remains below early 2012 levels. Over the longer term trust has been rising.

General impression of the BBC - mean score / 10
1 = extremely unfavourable; 10 = extremely favourable

I trust the BBC - mean score / 10
1 = strongly disagree; 10 = strongly agree

Survey details

• The following data comes from a nationally representative survey conducted for the BBC by Ipsos MORI. In total, 2,043 UK adults aged 15+ were interviewed using a face-to-face omnibus and the data was weighted to reflect a nationally representative profile of the UK. Fieldwork was carried out between 21st–27th February 2014.

• This survey looks specifically at levels of public trust in news provision and people’s perceptions of the impartiality of news.

• The survey was designed to understand the range of scores that the public gives to news providers in terms of trust and impartiality, and how the BBC performs in comparison with the wider market.
In comparison with other news providers, the BBC remains by far the most trusted source of news in the UK.
