You say on page 2 of your statement that you became involved in this towards the end of March 1996, and you received a call from a contact. You say in the fourth line: "Hints that there was something amiss were already by this time beginning to circulate around Fleet Street."

This is 25 years ago we are talking about. It is a very, very long time ago. I don't know if you can elaborate on that in any way?

A. I can't in specific detail, except to tell you that I believe that I had heard -- I think it was -- news rooms in Fleet Street, I'm sure you know, Lord Dyson, are hotbeds of rumour and all sorts of things pass across news desks, and so on. I believe that I had heard that there was something wrong about that interview…

23 | OCTOBER 2020:

By the time I spoke to Bedell-Smith, I had come to accept that Bashir had shown me fake bank accounts to groom me, so that he could then get to Diana for the interview he was always secretly after. However, I had no proof that this was the case. It was not until late October 2020 that I received that proof, in the form of the FOIA papers released by the BBC that month, which finally conceded the fact that Bashir had commissioned forgery as part of his plan to dupe me, en route for Diana.

I have received thousands of interview requests over the years about Diana (my office established that there were 800 of these, from around the time of the tenth anniversary of her death, from every corner of the globe), and I very rarely give any, unless requested to by my family members. So, I had not even noticed turning down a request from Andy Webb, who was making a documentary for Channel 4, marking the 25th anniversary of the broadcast of the interview with Diana.

I had briefly overlapped with Webb when making some documentaries for the History Channel in 2004. In late October he sent me an email saying he respected my not wanting to take part in his documentary, which was about to air, but I ought to see the attached.

What I saw was utterly astonishing: a snippet from the Tony Hall BBC report of April 1996, in which I seem to have been accused (in a heavily redacted passage) of having shown Bashir fake bank accounts belonging to Alan Waller. I was outraged: I had done no such thing; and, to make the lie worse, the BBC seemed to be falsely claiming that I had given Bashir the idea to resort to using his own fake bank statements.

| 36   | 16. This is talking about the graphics for the Venables programme:
17. "... but, in one case, the backgrounds had been reconstructed. This had been a serious error by the programme producer, who would be formally told this."
21. That's you, as I understand it?
22. A. That's me.
23. Q. Just tell me a little bit about that?
24. A. Sir, you must be bored stiff of reading it. The graphic in question came from a document that was in a safe. |
| 37   | 1. I wasn't allowed to film it. I wasn't allowed to take a picture of it. I was allowed to write it into a tape recorder -- to read it into a tape recorder, word for word, which I did. I came back. I told BBC legal and BBC editorial policy what I had done and there were some discussions. I said I wanted to use this document in the show and some specific quotes. I produced the graphic with these photos in it that were word-for-word perfect and the BBC was comfortable that we ran this.
10. What I find astonishing, sir, is, I'm here, I'm told I made a serious error and I think there is another phrase as well that I will be severely rebuked. When you look at the language that is used, that Martin's untrue graphics intended to deceive, it is -- what's the phrase --
16. Q. Unwise and incautious.
17. A. Yes, sir. I'm asking you to draw attention to the unfairness of it. It is not an equivalence. More than that, mine was sanctioned by the BBC. There were discussions with editorial policy and with legal about |
21 this, and I understood, you know, it was not entirely 22 clear, but, my God, it was an awful lot better than what 23 Bashir did. I was never sanctioned. Nobody ever 24 brought it to my attention. This is all brand new stuff
25 to me. But they wouldn't have dared sanction me

38

1 because --
2 Q. Because the word used, I think, is "reprimand". You 3 never received a letter of reprimand?
4 A. I was never reprimanded for producing an honest
5 graphic,
6 for talking to legal, for talking to editorial policy,
7 for getting their sign-off on it and putting it in.
8 What more could an honest guy do?

<td>Although I cannot recall specific details, I believe that a potential programme on the future of the Monarchy may have been mentioned in team meetings in early 1995. I note that a document marked ‘For the Director General’, which I had not seen until I received it from the BBC a few days ago in the course of preparing this statement, refers to a conversation that is said to have taken place between myself and producer Mark Killick ‘at the beginning of 1995’ where a royal story was discussed... Although I cannot recall the particular conversation, I was sharing an office with Mark Killick at that time, we had worked together on the Venables investigation, and subjects as wide ranging as media coverage and surveillance had already been dominating headlines for some time so it is quite possible that such a conversation took place.</td>

We emphasised that this would be a &quot;forward-looking&quot; interview, focusing on her charitable work and exploring the role that she sought for herself. 10 A. No. I know I met him twice, but I'm assuming I met him three times before 19 September. If I can -- I don't want to interrupt your flow, but I cannot believe he came with anything more than the bare outline of accusation against Waller to the first meeting. I can't believe he came with bank statements. Because -- 11 I don't know, I'm just trying to make logical sense of it, you know. There is -- since I've written this, I've really, really scratched my head. I cannot name a date when I met him, but it is possible a third time before the 19th.
12 Q. It may not matter to get this absolutely precisely pinned down. It is just, if you can, it is helpful, but if you can't, I don't think it really matters?
13 A. I sadly can't.
14 Q. No. It is a long time ago now. It's extraordinary. If it hadn't been for all the documents you've kept, you wouldn't be able to give as much information as you are able to give.
15 So you had this meeting. You think he showed you these statements, what, possibly on 14 September?
16 A. Well, do you know, I've really scratched my head on this a lot. I just don't know. I'm just putting forward a possibility, and I don't remember this, but it seems possible that he may have shown me the bank statements relating to Waller on 2 September when I was leaving Heathrow, and the reason I hadn't thought that was possible was because I always travelled with my camera crew, and I thought -- you know, I certainly made no arrangement to meet him at Heathrow, but I'm piecing -- it is probably not at all helpful to piece together a hypothesis, but it is possible that he doorstepped me in Heathrow before I left for Argentina. Although I really think I would remember that.
17 The reason I thought it wasn't possible was because I had been with my camera crew and it would have been a very bold move for him to have tackled me in front of three witnesses with faked statements, but I've checked with them all in the last week, and my producer is 24 absolutely adamant she didn't come to Argentina, and 25 that's true. We were behind on the editing of other

11 pieces and I wasn't doing hard news, I was doing
2 feature. So she stayed behind in the edit room.
3 I spoke to my cameraman, who...
4 ...said he can't even remember the trip...

... Then I spoke to the sound recordist, who was so 6 precise, and he said, "Well, of course I can't remember
7 it because I wasn't there in Heathrow". It transpires 8 that the camera crew were flown out in advance of me to 9 get some footage. So I really was travelling alone.
10 So that takes away one of my reasons for him not 11 approaching me in front of three witnesses, but 12 I really -- I'm sorry to go slightly around in circles,
13 but I would be very surprised if I had been doorstepped 14 by a journalist in an airport and have failed to 15 remember it. But it is possible.

10 33. We met subsequently at Althorp House (in late August I believe) and Earl Spencer quickly launched into an attack on a man called Alan Waller - a name I had never heard before. He said that Mr Waller "..." who had stolen property from him and taken money from the press for leaking stories. I recall clearly that Earl Spencer said that he had employed private detectives who were investigating Mr Waller and that he fully expected to be in possession of evidence in the future.

I see from my appointments’ diary that I met Bashir at Althorp at 6pm on Thursday 14 September, 1995. It was at this meeting he showed me bank statements that Bashir showed me bank statements that, he said, showed that Richard Aylard (a senior courtier of the Prince of Wales, who had formerly served Diana) and Patrick Jephson (Diana’s Private Secretary, and her most loyal, sensitive and intelligent adviser) were receiving secret payments from dark forces, hostile to my sister.

I also clearly remember Bashir answering - without missing a beat - that this was because Aylard came from the Channel Islands. I did not check if that was the case at the time, because I felt no need to do so; but, looking at Wikipedia now, it appears that Aylard was born and educated in West and North London. I have no idea why it was folded in this way, but the awkwardness of Bashir at this time has stuck in my mind. note that these reference “bank statements which wrongly purported to show that two senior courtiers were being paid by the security services for information on [the Princess of Wales]”. I enclose a copy of the BBC article from which I have taken that quote dated 4 March 2021 with this note. This suggests that it is alleged statements showing payments to Mr Jephson and Mr Aylard, rather than to Mr Waller, that were the subject of the complaint.

3. There is nothing in any of the notes that Earl Spencer had produced that indicates that I had shown him such a bank statement.

4. There was never, during the 1996 inquiry, any mention of any other bank statements than those in Mr Waller’s name, as far as I am aware.
5. It has not been made clear to me when it is alleged that I showed Earl Spencer these statements.

6. Earl Spencer’s recollection of events from this time at best inaccurate (see my comments in relation to issue 8, the 19 September 1995 notes, below).

7. As I understand it there has been no suggestion from Mr Wiessler that he mocked up more statements than the ones in Mr Waller’s name at my request (pages 1230u – z) and the documents he appears to have provided to the Daily Mail are the Waller bank statements which appear in the bundle at pages 43e, f and g. I do not understand whether Earl Spencer alleges I asked another graphic designer to mock-up a different bank statement?
8. Where would I have obtained Mr Jephson or Mr Aylard’s bank details from? My comments about the lack of resources available to me to illegally obtain Mr Waller’s bank details apply equally to this matter.

9. The suggestion that a bank statement would show payments from security services sounds absurd to me – how would a bank statement show that? Would it list “MI6” as a payor?

10. I have consistently acknowledged that I mocked-up bank statements in Mr Waller’s name. I refer to mine and Tim Gardam’s 28 March 1996 statements which reference this at pages 945i and 945m(vi) and paragraph 12 of the Notes of my meeting with Anne Sloman and Tim Suter at page 981.

He said he needed to come see me as he had a job that needed doing in a great hurry. I was surprised at the reason for his call because Panorama would have had their own designers in my place and I didn’t understand why he would come to me. He said that the designers were busy working on the programme so he wanted to see if I could help mock up some documents. He described the job as small and confidential. I had forgotten that I had nearly two months leave and that this happened when I was not going into the BBC, but was starting my own company. I’ve also been made aware that Charles Spencer’s recollection is that he was shown these documents on 31 August 1995 and I’ve now reconsidered the date. The visit must have taken place on or before 31 August 1995 but I am also hoping that the BBC, or any other party, locates and provides to me the details of the courier showing the collection date in the early hours of the day it was delivered to Martin Bashir.</td>

They never became material to a programme and only reemerged, as you know, after questions were raised by colleagues and, subsequently, an inquiry. Q. A. Yes -- well, I mean, at this stage, it's -- I'm collating material, I'm meeting sources and people, and I'm trying to work out what shape a potential story would take, and normally what I would do is, I would put those notes or material into some kind of a file, and that file would then be research. 8 "- It was done in a rush because he [you] didn't

18 Then skipping a paragraph:
19 "Why use Penfold's name?…

7 for compiling the graphic.
8 "- he has none, other than he wasn't thinking."
9 I think it is fair to say, if this is an accurate
10 record of what you said to Hall and Sloman, you didn't 11 really provide them with any explanation as to why you 12 did it?
13 A. Did I not earlier refer to putting together a file,

15 "I was trying to get together a pile of evidence as 16 an addendum to my research brief ... I was trying to do 17 something I wasn't very good at."
18 Q. You're quite right.
19 A. So I think that would be -- forgive me for interrupting.
20 Q. No, please do.
21 A. My recollection is that I was confronted by an individual who wanted to do a particular story, and he kindly provided a bank statement and then a document from his private investigators, all of which he felt proved that this man was dishonest, and I was putting

71

1 this material together for the purpose of potential research that would form the basis of a programme, and that's why I've said on repeated occasions that that was what I was doing.
2 I accept what they say with me saying I wasn't thinking, and, again, in retrospect, if those two bank statements had never been constructed, or reconstructed, we wouldn't probably be here...

12 I would also say that -- and I do think this is important -- I have never gone to air with material on a programme that is ever -- would ever be, or has ever been, the subject of litigation --...

43| …are you able to say what the catalyst was for your introducing him to Diana and, in particular, what part you think the bank statements played in your decision to introduce him?
A. Well, they were the absolute clincher, because I had met Jephson and he seemed a nice chap. I didn't really know Aylard, but I remember him being around. The thought that Diana -- because I believed the bank statements, of course, because they're coming from a Panorama journalist who's been vouched for by the head of Panorama, and I had the highest respect. You know, I had been a colleague of BBC, actually, because NBC and BBC used to share resources and so, for instance, when I was based in Johannesburg, I worked out of the BBC office. So for somebody from Panorama to present these documents to me, I believed them. I didn't really know what to do with them myself because they were clearly relevant to Diana. And when I said to Diana, "Look, I have been shown these things, and you really ought to see them", that is the -- that's the clincher. I mean, the Alan Waller thing had nothing to do with Diana. As I see it -- and obviously you're the man who is drawing conclusions, but as I see it, I think Waller was a very easy in to me and that I was effectively groomed for the second hit. It was always going to be the things to do with Diana that were going to get to Diana. I would never have mentioned the Waller things to Diana. They were of no interest to her -- well, might I have mentioned it over lunch? Possibly. But that was never going to get Bashir to Diana. It was the direct threat to her that I felt I had to report.

Q. When you say "never going to get Bashir to Diana", but the prior question is, what led you to arrange for Diana to meet Bashir? You've explained very clearly that the Jephson statements were the clincher. But if you hadn't had the Jephson statements but you'd had the Waller statement --

A. That wouldn't have done it.

Q. -- you wouldn't have introduced her?

A. Absolutely not.

Q. So what part do you think the Waller statements played in bringing about the interview?

A. Well, they weren't irrelevant because, of course, it hooked me in. I mean, I was duped. So that was clearly their purpose. So, yeah, when I flippantly say, "They had nothing to do with it", of course they did. It was the breadcrumb towards the trapdoor. It was a very clever -- this isn't your question. At no stage did he mention the future of the constitutional monarchy to me. He very cleverly came to me on my number one bugbear:

the bad behaviour of the press, which of course is ironic, but that's what he came to me with. When he had hooked me in on that by showing me a bank statement which seemed to prove what he was saying, then he played his ace.

and so does Samantha Weinberg remember us coming around as well.

Q. Without going through all the details of this huge range of diverse topics and ground covered, what was her reaction to all of this?

A. Well, I can't -- I honestly can't remember. She didn't say much. I remember Bashir sitting there with an A4-sized notebook and he sort of went through them. So I can't remember, at the time, her really -- if I remember a tone, it was one of -- I don't remember her contributing, really.

Q. I don't suppose that she was reassured by anything that she was hearing?

A. No. I'm not sure if this is relevant. I feel that he was playing battleships and seeing what hit and so how he could -- I mean, I'm obviously coming from an angle where I've seen Bashir has done terrible things, so to try to make sense of what he has done, in my mind, he was scattering these things widely to see where Diana bit and she did bite Legge-Bourke, and the Jephson thing was obviously incredibly worrying. So I think that's how he learnt to progress those theories.

Q. In your statement on page 15, at the top of the page:

"It seemed highly improbable, as did some of his wilder comments about the Queen and Prince Edward. "I also felt ... that I was listening to a man who was not telling the truth. He was overexcited, but also shifty."

That's the impression you had and you've still got that impression in your mind and your memory?

A. Absolutely. That's why I consigned him to history at the end of the meeting. I felt -- I didn't know if he was a liar or a fantasist, but I knew he was bad news, in my opinion, and that was the end of him for me. I see, actually, I was very intrigued to see he did call a couple of times afterwards, but that was the end of my engagement with him, really.

Q. I was going to ask you about those calls in a minute. You say:

"The straight fact was that the things he had told 25 me during our meetings at Althorp did not fit with what

27 1 he was telling Diana now."

2  A. That's right.

10 said exactly the same thing when I met him or spoke to 11 him earlier about "...", the Daily Express

12 reporter. So that struck a -- I thought it was very

13 unlikely -- when I say the small details caught him out,

14 that was one. Because I thought it's so unlikely two 15 people would be doing the same thing in the same place.

16  Nothing else jumps out. But it was a sort of -- it

17 was (a) tone and (b) things -- just sort of details that

18 didn't add up with what I had heard previously.

<td>22 As I read this, if I am being -- if these assertions, 1 to 32, with an empty space for 33, are being attributed to myself, I think it would be important for us both -- or for me to be given the opportunity to go through some of them and ask you to look at them in detail, because I think this is very important. This appears to be the substance of the fundamental allegation, as I understand it, which is that I went into a meeting and told a series of lies that secured for me a relationship with the Princess of Wales. Am I correct in understanding that?</td>

<td>1 Q. You are correct. A. I'm afraid, if that's the case, then I think it would be worth our while to go through this. Because -- I'm happy to do so immediately or to wait for your guidance, but there are things in this which are -- I think one could categorise them: it is possible that I could have said some of these things, it's possible; there's a second category, where I think it is highly unlikely I would have said these things; and there's a third category, where I would never have said some of these things because I wouldn't believe them. I do fear that this is a collation of material which probably was written some time later, or even possibly last year, for the purpose of a newspaper story. I say that because of the content. Q. I think we will have to go through it, then, carefully. A. I'm really in your hands here. Let's start at the beginning and go through them.</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

47 1 A. Look at page 1 of the contemporaneous note, which is
Q. Let's start at point 1. Let's go through them all. I want, to be absolutely fair to you, to give you every opportunity to comment on all of these points?

A. Very kind:

"4-months ago, 3 men met him -- MI6. ... escort girls in Langham Hilton ..."

I have absolutely no idea what he's referring to. It says here "commissioned Wharf (scum)". If "Wharf" is "...", he is somebody that I have had dealings with and indeed have filmed with. I would never refer to him as "scum", if that is what this is.

Point 2:

"Aylard paid by Jonathan Dimbleby. 2 years ... 1 year ago, decided to attack Diana."

I had the great privilege of working in the same department as Jonathan Dimbleby for two years. Jonathan Dimbleby would never take, nor give, money. The reason why this is particularly ludicrous is because, as you will know, for a period of over 14 months, I believe is what was published, Jonathan Dimbleby had access to the Princess of Wales for a documentary and a 600-page book. It simply defies logic that I would suggest that anyone had to pay Jonathan Dimbleby anything for access.

"MI6 taped C ... 'in endgame' -- D told Aylard what she thought of him, + that she wouldn't divorce."

That suggests that it is the Princess of Wales who is saying that. That's not me saying it. If I'm sitting in front of the Princess of Wales, am I telling her what she's told Aylard? It doesn't make any sense.

I'm just trying to focus on some of the most important ones. Point 7 on page 60:

"Difficult relationship with William for D ..."

Again, this suggests that the princess herself is talking about how worried she is about Tiggy, and she's the only one who would have known if there was a difficult relationship with her son. How on earth would I be sitting there at a meeting telling the Princess of Wales about her relationship with her son?
It doesn't make any sense.

Q. You keep saying it doesn't make any sense. I take it that, by that, you mean you did not say it?

A. Well, I did not say it, absolutely. But what I'm asking, Lord Dyson, is for you to reflect on the social dynamics of me sitting in a meeting with the Princess of Wales and telling her about her relationship with her son being difficult. What possible logic and evidence would I have for telling the mother of her child the nature of the relationship?

Point 8:

"D: ..."

Again, I wonder whether he's referencing her speaking there:

"... for past 6 months, had letters delivered ..."

I note from the Daily Mail that it was alleged that I had suggested mail had been intercepted, but, again, I look at that and it looks as though the "D:" is referring to things that have been said by the Princess of Wales. How would I know about her chauffeur? I didn't know anything about any of her personal details. Then it says:

"Change your chauffeur."

Is it possible that she said this, made this allegation, and I said, "Change your chauffeur", or indeed Earl Spencer said, "Change your chauffeur"?

If you turn over to point 11 on page 61:

"James Goldsmith ..."

Again:

"... Jonathan Dimbleby told him 'She's had it'."

Annabel Goldsmith was a very close friend of the Princess of Wales. She went to her house in Ham regularly. She's much more likely to know what James Goldsmith thinks than I ever could. I had no connection with James Goldsmith in my life.

Again, I have to ask you, Lord Dyson, if I said that, would it not be fairly straightforward for the Princess of Wales to ring up Annabel Goldsmith and say, "You won't believe this, but this chap, this journalist
I've never met before, has told me that your husband has had a meeting with Jonathan Dimbleby and told him, 'She's had it'. I mean, what an appalling thing to say and allege, fairly dramatic, but very easy to resolve as to whether it was true.

You go on. Point 10 -- sorry.

Q. You skipped over point 9. Do you want to say anything about point 9? About "Bugs on car"?
A. Again, "3 lines at KP bugged; mail read ..."
Again, imagine the situation, Lord Dyson. I'm talking to the woman who lives in the property. If this, or anything like this, were true, it could be resolved immediately. It could be checked immediately.

I take you to the next page, 61, points 14 and 15:
"D's stepped up engagements. Off to Chiracs ...
"VJ day: D asked. PC stopped it, tried to stop it, + failed."

How on earth would I be telling the Princess of Wales details like this when it's clearly –

I'm telling her what she's done in relation to the Chiracs? I'm telling her about VJ Day, that she asked PC, presumably Prince Charles, "tried to stop it, + failed". I go on. Point 17 -- sorry, forgive me:
"Aylard terrified of Tiggy -- she's very powerful."

How would I have any access to a woman who is employed by the Prince of Wales to care for his children and have access to a conversation which, excuse me, I'm reporting from the Prince of Wales's private secretary to his nanny? That sounds like the sort of thing the Princess of Wales believed, that she was powerful somewhat.

Point 19 -- sorry, I just need to go back.

"D finished with Soames in March. She trying to reconvene with Nicholas S."
I'm assuming that may be Sir Nicholas Soames.
Again, surely she would know about her own relationships. How would I be telling her about her relationships with her girlfriends? It doesn't make sense.

Again, I take you to point 20 -- sorry, point 19:
"Fergie gone to US for huge deal today. Andrew looks after her."

This is an individual that the Princess of Wales is related to and is a close friend of. Does that sound as if she's telling us this or I'm saying this in the meeting:

"For a huge deal."

What huge deal:

"Andrew looks after her."

This sounds as if the Princess of Wales is speaking.

Then there is this reference here:

"Edward has AIDS?"

Again, it's being alleged that I'm sitting in my first meeting with the Princess of Wales and her brother and I'm making an allegation about a serious, chronic, potentially fatal, illness that may have afflicted her brother -- her brother-in-law. If I were to say that, surely one would accept, if I was the originator of that idea, it would be very easy to check the provenance of that claim. (Clicks fingers) Just like that. It would make me look ridiculous and a complete and utter fantasist and the relationship with the princess would never have taken off if I was exposed as that kind of fool. I take you to number 28 --

Q. Are you saying that you just don't think that any of this was said by anybody at this meeting?

A. I'm saying, Lord Dyson, that I cannot possibly have said the things that are being attributed to me because they are so utterly outlandish and so easy to check that, had I said any of these things, the Princess of Wales could have rung Buckingham Palace and said, "Has Prince Edward contracted HIV?" In other places, it is quite clear that she is talking about her friends -- the Soames, Fergie. Again, if I may -- and I think this will help you. If you go to 63, at point 28:

"... £20,000 on clothes. Fergie told D."

It is being alleged that I am telling the Princess of Wales what her sister-in-law, the Duchess of...
York, Sarah Ferguson, has told her. What possible basis would there be for me saying that?

If you move on to point 32:

"Graham Harding, Fergie's contact, has swept Ken Palace recently. Can't do telephone lines. Didn't do it thoroughly."

If I may ask you, Lord Dyson, how could I possibly know if this had happened? This sounds like something that the Princess of Wales is talking about, that Graham Harding, Fergie's contact, she has commissioned to come into Kensington Palace and sweep it, he can't do the telephone lines, but he's done it thoroughly.

Again, how is it possible that I'm alleged to have said this. This is why I say, Lord Dyson, the newspaper report was so outrageous, because what it did was, it relied upon what appears to be a contemporaneous note without actually reading what the note says. It is alleging that I have said these things, but they are ludicrous.

Why would I -- in so many categories, why would I be saying to the princess what she knows to be the case in relation to friendship groups, Sarah Ferguson, and so on?

It is interesting to me, and if you go to page 63, there is an area which appears to be boxed off, and, again, we have here, "Bhatia" -- this obsession that Earl Spencer has with Shekhar Bhatia:

"... no action -- but number of interactions with BBC."

"Tried to get job on 'Public Eye' ... editor said ... corrupt. Legal department ... will take one year."

It looks as though that may be the only thing that I said at the meeting, because, when you take everything else that has been written here, it is -- I mean, let me take you also, if I may, to point 23 on page 62 of your evidence bundle. It says:

"... bleeping Swatch."

In the Daily Mail newspaper, it was alleged that I had said that Prince William had been given a watch that was somehow a device. Well, if I'm sitting in a meeting making an allegation that the princess's son has a Swatch which is in some way being used for bugging purposes, would it not strike you as perfectly obvious that all she would need to do is go and see her son, ask him for the watch and I would be immediately discredited as an idiot and a fool and somebody not to be trusted?

"3 days to get [turn] with William, after he goes back to D."

Again, how can I possibly know about the familial arrangements of children for two parents who have separated? I'm sorry, but this document is, I think, a collation of material -- I do not know where or who has said everything, but it is very hard to believe that this was a contemporaneous note of everything I said, because it would be -- I'm not the cleverest person in the world, but I'm quite sure you would agree that anybody making specific allegations about personal relationships, about ill-health, about all kinds of things, all of that could be very, very easily checked and dismissed.

One other thing I think you need to know, Lord Dyson, and you may already know this, it has been a matter of public comment for some time that the Princess of Wales had a number of relationships, and they included clairvoyants, mediums, mystics, various other people, who provided her with support, consolation, and so on.

... What I'm saying to you is that, not only is this document very, very difficult to accept the terms of what it is alleged that I'm supposed to have said, but it is perfectly possible that some of the material in here are things that she had garnered and she had said and, as I say to you, there are so many occasions in Point 11 [sic] on page 62:

"Julia Samuel out of the way since June. Menzies out from March -- fell out severely."

How would I be sitting in front of the Princess of Wales telling her that she's fallen out with her best friends? The breadth of information. It's just not possible. I don't know any of these people.

Q. There is no doubt that an awful lot of things set out here were fantastic. I think you use the word "fantasist". The question is, whose words are they? Spencer says that they came from you and that he thought you were a fantasist and that your motivation might have been to frighten Diana. Can you offer any explanation for this? Are you saying this is pure invention on the part of Spencer, or what are you saying?

A. I can't speculate on what Earl Spencer's thinking was. All I can say to you is, if you go through this document, it contains -- if it is alleged to be a record of a very first meeting with the Princess of Wales, it concerns things where not only on the surface does it appear she's talking about her own life, her friendships, her details, it would be -- I just don't know how I am supposed to be telling the Prince of Wales about her arrangements with her children or about her arrangements with a security expert that she has employed at Kensington Palace that was advised to her by Sarah Ferguson, or how I am saying things that are so outlandish, like a member of the Royal Family has a serious illness, for which there is -- was no evidence and which it would be possible, within a phone call, to dismiss immediately.

What I'm saying to you is, I don't know who said these things or whether they were said, but I am confident that, in the vast majority of cases, I could not possibly have said these things, because if I -- and remember, Lord Dyson, if my motive is to ingratiate myself with the Princess of Wales, would it not make sense for me to say things circumspectly that could be 18 very easily proven or disproven? I mean, would that not make sense?

But it would have been a breach of the guidelines, wouldn't it, even if they had not been shown to Princess Diana? 10 A. It would certainly have been a breach of the guidelines if they had been shown to anybody, yes. Whether it would have been a breach of the guidelines if he had made up the document as graphics to hold in a research brief, I'm not sure. <table>

</table>
| 11   | 24 A. Lord Dyson, I have thought long and hard about this.
      | 25     | I have to say, I have worked with Tom Mangold, I have |
| 12   | 1      | been Tom Mangold's producer, and we have sparred over
      | 2      | this slightly. It is the norm that in current affairs
      | 3      | long-form film making, particularly the investigations,
      | 4      | you run a producer and a reporter alongside each other.
      | 5      | They're meant to complement each other. They are meant
      | 6      | to check each other. This was not an investigation,
      | 7      | sir. This was an interview. I suspect -- you said to
      | 8      | me I mustn't speculate.
      | 9      | I think if Martin could get in the room with | 10     | Princess Diana, I'd back him against anybody. Would the
      | 11     | route he took have made a difference if there had been
      | 12     | a senior producer with him? I think it might have done,
      | 13     | but I think Tom is overstating the case.
      | 14     | When I worked with Martin, and when I worked with | 15     | Tom, we're both senior people in our little world, we
      | 16     | would quite often divvy up the work. So I would go in
      | 17     | one direction to seek one thing and the reporter would
      | 18     | go in another direction to seek another. So if Martin
      | 19     | wanted to create some improper device and then show it
      | 20     | at a meeting, I would not necessarily have been there
      | 21     | alongside him to know it anyway. That's the first
      | 22     | thing.
      | 23     | I would look at it, Lord Dyson, much like the BMA
      |       | |
24    looked at Shipman. If you recall, the BMA decided that 25    no doctor's practice could have a single partner after

| 13 | 1   | Shipman, there would be two partners. For that very |
|    | 2   | reason, the checking and the weight and the balance, but |
|    | 3   | I don't think the BMA would say it would eliminate the |
|    | 4   | possibility of a rogue doctor. I think, to Tom's point, |
|    | 5   | it would have made it more difficult, but it wouldn't |
|    | 6   | have eliminated the possibility. If a reporter was |
|    | 7   | determined to be rogue, I don't think a producer would |
|    | 8   | have been able to stop that. |
|    | 9   | Q. You think he's overstating the case, do you, when he |
|    | 10  | says that with a story of this kind and with somebody -- |
|    | 11  | he describes Martin as being an "untested operator". |
|    | 12  | I read what you are saying as you don't agree with that |
|    | 13  | at all? |
|    | 14  | A. Tom was Panorama's lead reporter for 25 years, sir. |
|    | 15  | They were all untested compared to him. Martin was not |
|    | 16  | an untested reporter. He had won awards, he had broken |
|    | 17  | big stories, with me and with other producers and |
|    | 18  | things. I think that's unfair. Tom's point of two |
|    | 19  | people are the norm is fair and that two people can |
|    | 20  | check each other better is fair. I think what I'm |
|    | 21  | saying to you, if someone was determined to be rogue, |
|    | 22  | I'm not sure that two people would have resolved that |
|    | 23  | issue. |
|    | 24  | Q. So the norm you think would have been, with |
|    | 25  | particularly |
|    |     | something of this significance and sensitivity, to have |

| 14 | 1   | had two people involved; is that a fair way of putting |
|    | 2   | it? |
|    | 3   | A. Yes, it would have been more normal, sir, but this was |
|    | 4   | an interview, not an investigation. To the extent -- an |
|    | 5   | investigation normally raises more ethical questions. |
|    | 6   | An interview was, basically, can we get there, will the |
|    | 7   | person sit down and do it? |

…He worried that his graphics had been presented as genuine documents to someone. He was concerned that they might have played a role in obtaining the Panorama interview with Princess Diana through deception. Matt asked me what he should do as he was afraid that he might become the target of a blame game. I
I was immediately suspicious about the veracity of these documents. Whilst it was just about conceivable that News International was paying these people, it seemed to me inconceivable that Penfolds Consulting was paying them too.

The absence of any other payments (other than a suspicious £4,000 cash withdrawal) also made these statements highly suspect – the transactions cried out “look at me” in a way that simply would not happen in real life.

Matt had told me in the earlier phone call that Martin had asked that these graphics be produced overnight as a matter of urgency.

I have a copy of the invoice that Matt sent to the BBC dated 16/10/95 saying, “To complete artwork for Panorama overnight at short notice” and confirming that the instruction came from “a telephone conversation with Martin Bashir to complete job by first thing next morning”.

Matt had said that the bank statements needed to be barked over to Heathrow as soon as they were completed which reinforced the idea that they were needed extremely quickly.

The more I considered this, the more concerned I became. The Diana interview needed no such graphics but the urgency of the request suggested that they had an important role to play somewhere in the proceedings.
As I reflected on it, I very reluctantly concluded that there was a real possibility that the bank statements may have been used to deceive someone and the likeliest target seemed to be Earl Spencer who was widely known as the gatekeeper to Diana.

The following day I approached him and said I had something I needed to discuss urgently. We met in the BBC canteen and I showed him the bank statements. I asked him what they were for and he was clearly very angry that I had the documents. He refused to answer my questions and told me that it was none of my business.

A. If I had been thinking a little straighter when I wrote that, I would have added the words "at the meeting".

Q. Sorry, can you explain that?

A. What I meant to say, and I checked my original script last night, because I thought I had said it and maybe the subs took it out, but I'm afraid I didn't say it. I should have written, "In my view, he clearly knew all about the alleged forgeries at the meeting". I'm not implying here that he clearly knew the forgeries had been created. I'm saying that he knew about the allegations at the meeting we had with him.

Q. Oh, I see. I read it as he already knew, but you're not saying he already knew?

A. Semantically, you're correct. He knew before we came to see him, but I wish it didn't have a tiny implication that he always knew about the forgeries, ergo, he must have been involved in them, because nothing could be further from my mind. In other words, when we went to see him, he obviously knew everything about the allegations of the forgeries because he didn't ask us a single question about it. And if the situation was that we were breaking news to him, he would have kept us in there for an hour, asking every single question that one would obviously raise. So I regret the fact I didn't add the three words "at the meeting".

Q. Thank you for clarifying that, because I wasn't sure whether you were actually saying that he was somehow involved in conspiracy with Bashir. You're not saying that?

A. No, absolutely not. Absolutely not. In fact, I have no evidence -- I know very little about the crime. My speciality is the coverup. But I would be astonished if Steve knew about the forgeries.

Q. This acrimonious meeting did not last very long?

A. No.

12.1 One of the names on the bank statements was a Jersey based company called Penfolds Consultants which… featured heavily in our Venables programme.
12.2 I had said to Steve that it was rather odd that the same Penfolds name appeared on the Diana bank | statements and was it possible that Martin Bashir had just plucked a name to put on the statements?

At this latest meeting Steve told me that it was all a coincidence... and he repeated that that the information on the statements was correct...

| 2    | Phase 1: December 21 – 23 1995
At the end of our final management routine meeting on the morning of Monday December 21st my assistant Noelle Britton alerted me to the fact that Martin Wiessler, a free-lance graphics designer, needed to see me on a matter of importance. I saw him straight away.
He told me that he had been asked by Martin Bashir to mock up | a set of documents, specifically two bank statements, using information given to him by Martin. There was some haste in the commission, and he had been asked to deliver the finished documents to Martin at Heathrow Airport. I do not recall when he said he had been asked to create these documents, but I understood that it was some time before the interview itself had been recorded.

I understood that he had worked with Martin Bashir before, including creating documents for inclusion as graphics in a Panorama film using content given to him by the production team.

He was now concerned that:

- These documents might have been intended in some way to persuade the Princess to take part in the interview
- That he might now be being “set-up” as the fall guy for this, not least because the disc on which he had kept the electronic version of the documents had gone missing, and he feared it had been stolen, and might have found its way to the press

This was clearly a very significant issue, and I immediately asked Mr Wiessler to repeat the story to Tim Gardam, the Head of Weekly Programmes, whose office was adjacent to mine and to whom I directly reported. I recall that that meeting took place almost immediately.

After Mr Wiessler had repeated his story, I recall that Tim Gardam and I met urgently with Steve Hewlett, Editor of Panorama, and Martin Bashir.

What was news to me, at that moment in March, was that Steve Hewlett had spoken to Earl Spencer to vouch for Bashir before the first meeting because Steve Hewlett had never told me that. I didn't see there was anything particularly suspicious or untoward in his failure to tell me that, but what that tells me is that clearly by March, and sometime after the interview, I was aware that Earl Spencer had been the person through whom Hewlett had -- through whom Bashir had got to the Princess of Wales. Towards the end of March 1996 – I cannot be sure of the exact date - I received a call from a contact who asked if I would be interested in learning more about a story concerning the extraordinary interview which BBC Panorama reporter Martin Bashir had obtained with Princess Diana and which was shown to the public by the BBC in November 1995. Hints that there was something amiss were already by this time beginning to circulate around Fleet Street. As a result of that call, I set off to knock at the door of a graphic designer who, according to my source, had been asked to create documents for Bashir in relation to the interview…

Q. Tim Gardam told me that when he was told for the first time, contrary to what Bashir had been previously saying, that he had shown these statements to Earl Spencer, that he, Tim Gardam, was absolutely furious. Let me just read to you a short passage of what he said to me in his evidence I think on Tuesday of this week. He said: "Answer: ... It would never have occurred to me that a BBC journalist would lie (a) to produce something to deceive someone, and then at the same time to lie to his editors and managers."

The relationship that she had with Bashir, 12 however it was initiated, was one that had developed independently and, therefore, there were no further questions to be pursued about the relationship with the princess and the securing of the interview with the princess. 20 Tony Hall, was it?
21 A. Yes, I presume so. I take the first line of that paragraph, that I had consulted with Tony, I had given him an account and reflected on what Martin had told us, and this was, therefore, our considered view.
25 Q. It did depend, didn't it, on accepting the truth of everything that he told you?
2 A. It depended on accepting the truth of what he told us in relation to his dealings with the princess and her corroboration of it in the note that she had sent.
5 Q. Then let's move to the next paragraph:
6 "However, it is also clear to us that the creation and use of some material in the early preparation for the programme was in breach of the ... guidelines on straight dealing."
10 Let's just stop there. What are you referring to there?
12 A. So the fact that, having created these documents, they were then put to use by being shown to Earl Spencer. That's the only use that was made of them, but it was in making any use of the documents, that was a breach of the guidelines.
17 Q. You didn't have to consider whether, by making use of the documents in that way, that had somehow, maybe indirectly, contributed to the securing of the interview?
21 A. I think we felt that that issue was addressed by both the nature of the information contained in the documents, which -- information that originated with the princess, and the fact that, at the point at which those documents were used, Martin Bashir had already established an independent relationship with the princess.
27 Q. But you only knew that, or believed that, because that's what he told you?
5 A. That's right.
6 Q. Wasn't that an unwise thing to do, given that he had palpably been dishonest in a very serious way and lied more than once?
9 A. My Lord, I can't recall the nature of the conversation that I had with Tony Hall after submitting Martin Bashir's account of it, but I think it was clear to us that Martin Bashir had committed a breach of the guidelines and that there did, therefore, need to be a further stage of the process.

Q. Again, I'm sorry to press you on this, but it is quite important. The belief that you had that Bashir had already formed an independent relationship with the princess was quite an important part of your thinking, wasn't it?

A. I imagine that it would have been, yes. I can't, at this distance of time, rank the impressions, if you like, but it would have been a significant part of our thinking.

pointed out, The Mail's specific questions. I have to say, given what was said to the press on 7 April, having now seen these logs afresh, I don't know why it didn't more closely resemble the 7 April log, which actually explained that the BBC had investigated the mocked-up documents and confirmed that they were not connected to the Diana interview, which, of course, she, herself, also confirmed.

Q. You very frankly and fairly say that the statement did not really address the questions asked at all.

A. Looking at this afresh, I can see that the obvious answer to who commissioned the mocked-up statements would be Martin Bashir; had their authenticity been called into question -- yes; and an investigation was conducted by news management in December 1995. We could have also volunteered that they weren't shown to Diana, as confirmed by her, so were not used in the interview. It is clear that senior staff were informed and concerned about it.

So, you know, with the benefit of hindsight, I can see that this log, unlike, I believe, the log of 7 April, which was only a day later, did not answer those questions specifically.

Q. We will come on to that log in a moment. This statement was very clearly a carefully drafted statement. This was not just dashed off in a moment. It was a product of a number of people putting their heads together, including no less than Tony Hall and Steve Hewlett. That was presumably because it was recognised that this was -- it was important to give a good answer to these questions. Would you accept that?

A. I would accept that. It was also not unusual in those times to produce a general statement rather than actually responding to specific questions. That wasn't an unusual thing.

11 Q. Not that they may have been, but that they had been. There was no doubt about that. That's why Tim Gardam was pretty angry about this, wasn't he? We can look at his statement, if you wish, the statement of 28 March. I don't know if it's in the bundle. I'll just read to you from a passage in his statement. He said, this is on 23 March, and after Gardam had been told by the Mail on Sunday that Spencer had been shown these documents which had -- I'm reading from the transcription of Tim Gardam's note made on 28 March.

<tr>
<td>9 Q. Are you saying to me, therefore, you accept that you knew that the answer to the first of Blackhurst's questions, &quot;Had the statements been shown to Earl Spencer?&quot;, you knew they had been shown to Earl Spencer, but because you believed there was going to be some further investigation, you didn't really want to say too much because you didn't know everything that there was to be known. | 21 Q. I really do. But the fact is -- because you do say -- you did tell me a few minutes ago that, in hindsight, you weren't very happy with the way in which the questions in the first press log had been answered?
A. That's correct.

1 Q. Really, 7 April was a better effort, if you like -- my words, not yours, but I think that's the gist of it.
A. Yes.
4 Q. But when we look at it and we examine it, and forgive me for putting a lawyer's hat on here --
A. No, not at all. Not at all.
7 Q. -- but I've spent a lot of my life in the law. So you were asked this very, very precise, specific question,
"Had the statements been shown to Earl Spencer?", and you simply don't answer it?
A. And all I can say in relation to that is what I said a moment ago: if you ask me now whether or not I might have confirmed that with new information available, further confirmation, I think, possibly, from Martin Bashir that he had shown the documents to Earl Spencer, then the question might have been answered in a different way.
8 Q. Because, of course, at this time, you didn't know whether Tony Hall was going to require a further investigation to be carried out?
A. No. Only that it seemed to be Tim Gardam's recommendation.
23 Q. What, in his note?
24 A. Yes.

5 MR SMITH: The paragraph reads:
"However, the same day, I agreed with the MD of NCA, Tony Hall, that the BBC needed to find out the entire truth behind Bashir's activities, given he had misled us when asked specifically about the graphicised documents and appeared to have acted unethically and in breach of the guidelines. On the Monday, there was a meeting ..."
And then it goes over to the next page:
"... where it was agreed that a full enquiry would be undertaken + action decided upon when the full facts 15 were known. Given that I was leaving the BBC 3 days later, this would be conducted by the managing editor of weekly programmes to ensure continuity ..."
18 But then, as you pointed out earlier, right at the end he says: "At [the] time of writing, Tony Hall ... has not determined what action he will take but will do so once he has had time to study carefully what has occurred."
23 LORD DYSON: Thank you very much…

| 21 | So by the time of this press log, you knew all of that. You knew there was going to be a full enquiry. You knew that it appeared, at any rate, to Tim Gardam that Bashir had acted unethically and in breach of the guidelines and that there needed to be a full enquiry. You had all that knowledge? |

| 2 | A. I can only assume that I did. I can't say for certain that I did. |
| 3 |
| 4 | Q. But I think you said that you did have Tim Gardam's note of 28 March? |
| 5 | A. I expect I would have had that note on that date, yes. |
| 6 |
| 7 | Q. Just coming back to these specific questions, you accept that you didn't answer, "Had the statements been shown to Earl Spencer?", but I think you're saying, well, you were being a bit careful, knowing that there was to be a full enquiry, you didn't want to commit yourself to saying anything until more was known? |
| 8 |
| 9 | A. Correct. |
| 10 |
| 11 |
| 12 |
| 13 | Q. The second question was, "Had the statements been produced in conjunction with an earlier investigation?", and you didn't answer that question either. Was that for the same reason? |
| 14 | A. No, we wouldn't respond to questions about ongoing or abandoned investigations. That was our policy. |
| 16 |
| 17 |
| 18 | Q. The third question was, "Had Earl Spencer been questioned by the BBC?", and that wasn't answered either. |

15 Q. Then you will see another journalist at the very foot of this one:
17 "From Simon Rahamim ... Daniel James (UK News) asked 18 if there had been any investigation into the use of the documents."
20 "The use" as opposed to "the creation" of the documents. The answer was, "Replied as above". What is "C.CINCA aware"? What is that a reference to?
23 A. That's me being made aware of the response that had been given.
25 Q. Oh, that's you.

1 A. Controller, Communication and Information, News and Current Affairs.
3 Q. I see. Thank you very much. You know, because we told you in the letter that Mr Smith sent to you, that Nick Fielding has stated to me in his statement that the statement in the first press log, the one in quotes, which was referred to also in the second press log, he described it as a perfect essay on evading the point and denying the truth. Would you like to comment on that?
10 A. I think I'd reiterate that my impression is that the April 6 log is a poor example of drafting by committee. It looks like a general statement that was put together to describe the mocked-up bank statements in response to what The Mail said it knew about them, and it didn't address The Mail's specific questions. I don't know why it didn't more closely resemble the log of the following day.
18 If Nick Fielding's allegation is that it was deliberately evasive, I don't accept that, particularly given what was said in the April 7 log about having investigated the matter and not condoning the creation of the documents. Also, to reiterate, it is common practice to draft general statements to give an organisation's position on an issue, rather than addressing specific questions.

Before publication we were given a carefully-worded statement that included these words: “The draft graphic reconstructions on which this story is based have no validity and have never been published. They were set up for graphics purposes in the early part of an investigation and were discarded when some of the information could not be substantiated. They were never connected in any way to the Panorama on Princess Diana and there was never any intention to publish them in the form we believe they have been leaked. Their use would never have been sanctioned at a high editorial level and if they had been transmitted it would have been a clear breach of our editorial guidelines.” Which is a perfect essay on evading the point and denying the truth...

3 Q. The position being more robust, is that a reference to what you say at the top of page 979c?
4 A. Yes, because, again, I just go back, the underlying tenor that the princess was inveigled into the interview in some sort of way was also very much top of our mind when we were talking as colleagues at board of management and, you know, that was clearly not the case. It's a separate issue with Earl Spencer, but her letter was not broadly known. So that's the more robust position that I was referring to.

3 Q. Can you remember, what was your objective in having this meeting? What was the purpose of it, from your point of view?

6 A. I wanted to find out why he'd done it. You know, we knew he'd done it. We knew, at that stage, what he'd done. But what was the point of it? I think that was where I was coming from: why did you do it; what was the point of it? His explanation was, he didn't really know why he did it, it was a stupid thing to do. And we bought that. And that was my view. I think it's still my view, quite honestly, even having thought about it as much as I have over the last few weeks, that he was flailing, in a way. He couldn't cope with what he was trying to do, and I think it would never have got to this stage, in a way, if the interview hadn't been such a high-profile interview, if it had led to an interview with somebody else which hadn't had the impact that that extraordinary interview had, and the impact of the interview was all about what Princess Diana said, it wasn't really about Martin at that stage, which may have been why she wanted him to do the interview, so it was all about her and not about the interviewer -- not Oprah or David Frost or whoever.

20 1 Q. We have the notes of the interview at page 980. These were your notes, were they?

3 A. No, they were Tony's notes, because Tony always used this very large font and he was the only one who ever used this large font and that's how I know they're Tony's notes.

7 Q. Clearly I'm going to have to ask him about them, but it seems from these notes that you did go back to the beginning with him. I mean, you didn't sort of plunge into the middle and end of the story, saying, "We know you've done this. We know you've shown them to Earl Spencer. We just want to know why you did it". Can you remember how long this meeting lasted?

14 A. An hour and a half, I should think.

17 A. Well, we asked him to tell his story, and Tony has got a note of what he said. That was the story. You know, he starts -- we asked Martin to tell his side of the story, and that's what he said. Those were his notes.

Q. We get, for example --
A. We had his word then -- they were doing the investigation on and off from doing other programmes.
He came back. He was just doing this on the side, really, on top of other things, and it was Steve Hewlett who said, "Well, go for her, go on. Let's see if we can get an interview".

Q. You're looking at paragraph 7 of these notes.
A. Sure.

Q. Paragraph 6 records that Bashir said:
"In a second meeting with Spencer, Alan Waller's name came up."
Just like that, it seems. It's slightly odd.
I realise this is a summary of what was said:
"Spencer said, 'I want to show you something' ..."
A. Yes, I mean, the difference of opinion, as I understand it now -- and that's only with the benefit of hindsight and what Earl Spencer had said; we didn't know this at the time -- is Martin is saying Earl Spencer showed him the bank statement and Martin is -- and Martin is saying he showed it to him -- sorry, Martin is saying Earl Spencer showed it to him. Earl Spencer said he never showed him anything of the sort.

Q. But of course, by this time, you knew that he had?
A. Yes.

Q. You knew that this was untrue?
A. We didn't know -- we know he'd showed it to -- no,
"I want to show you something" were the details, not the actual -- the forged statement was shown to him

afterwards and had more detail in it.

Q. Okay. Paragraph 10 says:
"That evening [the evening of the third meeting] the Princess of Wales bleeped Martin and said thank you.
The relationship is established."
A. Yes.

Q. That's what he told you and, as I say, as I've said already, if you'd asked Spencer -- Earl Spencer -- for his side of the story, you would have got a very different picture. But you say, well, you never really thought it was necessary to contact Earl Spencer, and, really, although you were getting all this detailed story from him -- have I misunderstood the thrust of what you are saying? -- really, by now, what you are really interested in was an explanation for why he'd done it rather than the whole history as to how you got this far?

A. Yes, that is correct.

Q. You weren't really interested in -- why were you letting him tell you in detail about the whole history, if --

A. Well, because you often say at the beginning of an interview to someone, you know, start off by saying, "You tell your side of the story", and that's what he was doing. He was giving, you know, his account. I think it wasn't an enquiry, in the sense in which you are conducting one, Lord Dyson. It wasn't. You know, we had big jobs, we had lots of other things going on in our lives. I was asked to go and sort it out, and that's what I did, and produced a report saying, "This is what I think we should do. This is the way forward. This is where we go on from here". So I wasn't conducting a forensic enquiry. I didn't have legal advice at that point. We didn't have -- you know, I didn't -- we didn't even have PAs doing things. We were doing all this along -- we were doing big jobs, you know, with an awful lot going on in our lives. Don't forget, this was a programme that had gone out four months previously. We had programmes that were going out tomorrow, the next day, a lot of programmes, all of which needed very careful scrutiny, editorial scrutiny. This was about something in the past for us.

Q. Well, was it? I mean, here the Mail on Sunday were making these very serious allegations about an interview which was as high profile as they come, and you are giving me the impression that this was really a fairly incidental, almost unimportant, thing you were engaged on?

A. No, it wasn't unimportant. It was one of many things we 24 were engaged on. I'm not saying it was unimportant. I'm saying there were many things we were engaged on.

24
1 And, don't forget, The Mail -- The Mail was constantly bashing at the BBC, constantly. This was one of many -- you know, we have had all sorts of challenges and so on.
2 So that's what you put up with. In BBC journalism, you're used to it. It's par for the course, you know.
3 Q. You say The Mail was always bashing the BBC. There's a cutting which is not in your bundle and you're probably not sorry it isn't in your bundle, but let me just tell you. This is from the Independent, and it is also 8 April, so just a few days before your meeting.
4 A. Yes.
5 Q. This is headed "BBC quizzed Diana over Bashir 'fake'", and it refers to the inquiry -- I think it refers to the inquiry that was conducted in December which says -- it says:
6 "This formed the basis of the internal inquiry [the December inquiry] in which Mr Bashir was cleared."
7 So that's talking about the earlier one. But it is very much talking about this story, and it says:
8 "A BBC spokesman said last night [that is to say on 7 April] that an inquiry had been held 'two to three months ago' into whether the documents had been used to secure an interview with the Princess. This inquiry, said the spokesman, 'culminated in an assurance from Princess Diana that she had never seen these documents'."

1 We know about that:
2 "The inquiry, said the spokesman, had cleared Mr Bashir."
3 Then a bit later on:
4 "Asked if Mr Bashir had shown the faked documents to Earl Spencer during the preparations for the programme on the Royal Family, the spokesman said: 'I don't know. All I know for certain is that they weren't used to secure an interview with Diana.'"
5 So, first of all, it wasn't just the Mail on Sunday.
6 This story was very much alive and kicking at the time of your interview, and you accept that, obviously?
A. Of course. It's in the timeline as well of all the --
and in the press logs, all the other enquiries from other newspapers. Of course.
Q. Yes. And there was this question being asked whether the documents had been shown to Earl Spencer, and of course we know that the BBC was made aware on 23 March, some two weeks earlier than this press spokesman said that he didn't know whether it had been shown -- they had been shown to Earl Spencer, so he personally may not have known, but, I mean, the BBC corporately did know.
So the point I'm putting to you is that, of course
I understand that the BBC -- you and Lord Hall and everybody else -- were very busy with all sorts of things, but this was, I suggest to you, a very important	hing going on, because, far from going away, which it had been hoped would happen after the December letter from Princess Diana, the story was coming back with a vengeance, I suggest to you?
A. Of course I agree with that. The story was coming back with a vengeance, and I'm not denying that for one moment.
Q. So it was really important to deal with it and you were taking it seriously, you say?
A. Very seriously. I mean, it's quite unusual, you know, for the head of news and current affairs and the acting head of the department in question to sit and cross-examine a reporter. I mean, you know, it wouldn't happen normally. It would be dealt with by the editor.
I mean, all those sort of things were dealt with by editors, normally. They were the line managers. So of course it was being taken -- and also Tony was going to report to the board of governors and the director-general. I'm not saying it wasn't taken seriously. I'm saying the focus, my focus, was on why he'd done it rather than going through a timeline, as we have done now, to sort out exactly who said what to whom when. It wasn't that sort of enquiry, and I didn't consider it to be that sort of enquiry.
2 Q. I have to put to you -- you will have seen Tom Mangold's article in the Times of November last year? I expect you have views about that article. It is written, shall we say, in really striking terms. What do you say about his accusation that it was the cosiest formal interview of his life, of Bashir's life?

A. One wasn't too pleased at that description, as you can imagine. It wasn't a cosy interview. It was not comfortable. It is not comfortable for someone to be called in for their two bosses to cross-examine them. What was comfortable about it? We wanted to find out what was going on. I think the word "formal" can be misleading. A lot of things have changed in the last 25 years. I've done a lot of formal interviews, both in my role at the BBC and also when I was working for the church, and I know that you don't do it without HR, you don't go through -- I know what the law is now, you go through all the disciplinary processes. It was not a formal interview in that sense. Otherwise, we would have had to have lots of stages and HR would have been present. It was Tony and I, as journalists, trying to find out what was behind where he'd been at. So it wasn't a formal interview.

Again, it wasn't an enquiry. "Enquiry" has taken on a different meaning in the last 25 years. There are enquiries going on at the moment on all sorts of issues, including this one, of course. But those enquiries didn't happen then. It was really Royal Commission or nothing in those days, wasn't it?

Q. You're probably right.

A. We were investigating. I think I'd be happier with that word than "enquiry". It wasn't -- there was nothing cosy about it. And Tom wasn't there, so I don't know why he thought it was cosy, because he wasn't there, as far as I know.

Q. No. I don't think he suggests that he was. I think he -- anyway, you have given your answer to that question. I just thought it was right that I put it to you for your comment.

A. Of course.

Q. Just coming back to the note of the meeting, page 980:
"Martin gave a lucid and detailed account of the events leading up to the interview ..."

Well, it's detailed. Did you consider it to be lucid?

A. Yes. Part of what lies behind all this is that Martin is lucid, he's -- you know, he's got charm and he presented it -- you know, he goes through it in a very serious way. That's his manner. You know, whether "lucid" was quite the adjective -- I'm just grasping for what a better one would have been and I can't think of one off the top of my head. "Plausible" has a pejorative tone to it, but you see where I'm getting at.

Q. Yes, okay. Were you aware -- I think you probably weren't, but let me just check. You said you hadn't seen the letter that Suter wrote, although, to be fair, I should be fair to you and say that that letter of 4 April was not actually sent.

A. I know.

Q. I shall have to ask Lord Hall about that because it was a joint effort, I understand, that letter, and maybe he knows why it wasn't sent. But it does refer to a breach of the guidelines, and I think you accept that, on any view, even taking what Bashir said at face value, there was a breach of the guidelines?

A. Yes. I've thought a lot about the guidelines, because, of course, when I became chief political advisor, which I was for the last seven years, the guidelines were very much part of my responsibility and the guidelines have gone through different iterations. The copy I have here is almost certainly not the current copy, because I left, what, 20 years ago, but it is the copy I was involved with, and there was a very good note, as a result of this, written about computer graphics. We can come back to that, if you want to ask me about it. In terms of the main guideline about straight and fair dealing, no, of course it wasn't. It wasn't. But 8 you shouldn't need a guideline to tell you that. You're 9 a BBC journalist, you don't go around telling fibs.
10 Apart from anything else, you'll always get caught.
11 Q. I don't think we need to look at the subsequent 12 guidelines which talked specifically about computer 13 graphics and so on, because the guidelines that were in 14 force at the time were the 1993 guidelines and the only 15 relevant one is the straight and fair dealing guideline?
16 A. Yes. It is a pity there wasn't one, because if there 17 had been, it would have been a bit clearer what you can 18 and cannot do.
19 Q. There is nothing unfair about "straight and fair 20 dealing". This was not a borderline case, was it?
21 A. No.
22 Q. So I don't think we need to worry about lack of 23 precision or detail in the guidelines. On any view, 24 there was a breach of the guidelines, and you accepted
25 that at the time, and it's clearly correct.

32 1 You have said to me several times now that, as far
2 as you were concerned, the main reason for this meeting
3 was to get an explanation from Bashir as to why he did 4 this.
5 A. Yes.
6 Q. You never got that explanation?
7 A. No. Our conclusion was, you know, "I don't think it is 8 a very big deal". He was out of his depth. Here I've 9 noticed this bit, he said other people -- Mark Killick 10 always produced "a brilliant folder of research. I was 11 trying to get together a pile of evidence to present to 12 Steve [the editor]. I was trying to do something 13 I wasn't very good at". Well, I don't think Martin had 14 a forensic mind and I think he was completely out of his 15 depth, he was just being stupid.
16 Q. Where have you just been reading from?
17 A. If you look at -- I'm just trying to help you with the 18 pages, but it's not paginated. Under point 13, there 19 are some bullet points, and I'm going down -- well, four 20 and five.
21 MR SMITH: It is page 982, Lord Dyson.
22 LORD DYSON: I have the page, yes, I'm looking at the bullet 23 points. Which one were you actually referring to?
I see, "I was trying to do something I wasn't very good at".

A. Yes, "... it was just one of those things". "I didn't think it was a big deal".

If I can go back a tiny bit, I wasn't suggesting we needed detailed guidelines to say that it was a breach of ethics. But I do think that if there'd been a guideline about graphics, he wouldn't have been able to say it wasn't a very big deal, and I regret that, and that was one of my recommendations, a specific one on graphics, because, you know, I agree with you of course that, you know, you don't go around making things up, but I think, if it had been a bit more specific that you don't make things up on paper in graphics, that would have stopped it happening, maybe.

Q. But at all events, you didn't agree that -- in your view, it was a big deal; it was a serious breach of the guidelines?

A. Yes.

Q. These notes were to form the basis of Tony Hall's report to the director-general.

A. Yes.

Q. I now understand why the language in his report so closely mirrors the language here, because the two documents were penned by the same person?

A. Yes, and it was a copy and paste, wasn't it, to some extent?

Q. Yes, it was.

Q. Just to go back to your interview with Martin Bashir for a moment, did it trouble you that you really didn't get an explanation from him as to why he'd done it?

A. "Trouble me" is not quite right. I just thought he was flailing around. People do stupid things. It was all done on the spur of the moment, all this ridiculous drama about Heathrow, as if that had anything to do with anything. It's all built up like some great spy story.
I just think he was failing around. I don't think he did it -- see, the real link is whether that document, mocked up for whatever reason, really played a part in her decision to give the interview, and, for me, that link isn't there. That link is quite tenuous. The link is to the introduction. But she could have been introduced and had phone conversations with him and never agreed to give an interview, and I think, one of the things that's troubled me a bit is, there were only two women in this story, the princess and me, and the assumption all along is we were a bit naive, a bit stupid, taken in. I don't think she was taken in.
I think she knew exactly what she was doing.

Q. You've never really -- I've got to put it. I have probably covered this already, but I will just cover it for the last time. You never really bottomed out that question of, how key a part did those documents play in effecting the introduction that Charles Spencer says he made of Bashir to Diana? That's the question. I'm just suggesting to you that your investigations didn't really go anywhere near enabling you to form a conclusion about the answer to that question?
A. I think you're right, Lord Dyson, but I would say, in my defence, that I was never asked to do that. What I was asked to do was go and sort out the situation, to find out why Martin did it, not what he'd done, because we knew what he'd done, but why he'd done it. I wasn't asked to answer the question you have just posed.
Q. So you say you were not asked to consider what part those documents played in leading to that interview?
A. No, I wasn't. I was asked why he'd done it. You're quite right, we never got a very satisfactory answer, though my answer would be that he was stupid and flailing around. No, I wasn't asked. It wasn't a formal legal enquiry. It would have been conducted very differently if it had been even a quasi legal enquiry, and it wasn't. It was never purporting to be
I was asked to go and sort things out. And I made those recommendations at the end, which I stand by, because I think they were quite sensible, but they -- but it wasn't a legal enquiry. The lawyers were not involved. You know, we didn't do anything -- apart from the timeframe, we didn't do the piecing together. I had no reason to speak -- I mean, with the benefit of hindsight now, 25 years later, you're right, saying, oh, yes, why on earth didn't she go off and talk to Lord Spencer? I had no reason to do so at the time. He had said nothing. I think, for us, context matters. It doesn't excuse his breach of ethics, which was clearly there. But the context was: she gave the interview freely, and we had her written evidence for that; she didn't complain about it afterwards -- in fact, she continued, as far as I can see, a relationship, talking and chatting to Martin Bashir, and it was never shown on air and it would never have got to being on air. Our ethics are about programmes and what gets on air. That's always the overriding factor in making judgments, and it would never have got on air, that forged document.

Q. The document that you have got in your bundle there, starting at 1001f, is the report for the director-general.

A. Yes.

Q. You've seen that, and you see that it follows very closely the document that we have been looking at, which is not surprising, since that was drafted by Tony Hall as well.

On page 1001j, he is talking about "I have talked to Martin ... I am satisfied of the following points".

Next bullet point:

"I have talked to Martin at length about his reasons for compiling the graphic:

"- he has none, other than he wasn't thinking."

Pausing there, that reflects how you saw it?

A. Yes.

Q. Then he says, next one:
"I believe he is, even with his lapse, honest and an honourable man. He is contrite."

Did you see this document before it was --

A. No, I wouldn't have been party to a personal memo to the director-general from Tony Hall, no.

Q. Do you agree with that?

A. Well, I agree that he was contrite. I mean, he was -- you know, he really was very sorry, because this guy saw everything falling away because of a stupid mistake he'd made. He'd done this amazing interview and then suddenly, four months later, his world was falling apart because of this stupid thing he'd done about the made-up bank statement.

"Honest" and "honourable" ...? Hmm. I think I might have toned that down a fraction.

Q. That little gesture has to be translated into language because the transcriber can't reflect that little gesture in the text.

A. I might have been more judicious, Lord Dyson, in my choice of language.

Q. Let's be blunt: he wasn't honest, was he?

A. No, not all the time. Not all the time. I mean, you know, we don't have -- let's be careful before we make these grand -- I'm not saying that you would, but, you know, I would make a grand moral judgment. We are not all divided into honest and dishonest people. I mean, some people are congenitally dishonest, like criminals and so on, but very few of us who would regard ourselves as being honest have never actually told a fib. Have you never not told a fib or elided something or shutting up about something? So I don't think he was a congenital liar. I think he was just silly.

Q. Well, he was more than silly. I mean, silly --

A. Okay, that he was very unwise and made a very foolish mistake, which he is paying a very, very heavy price for.

<td>18 What I'm suggesting to you is that, before we come to the time when you spoke to Bashir, on 17 April, nobody had got in touch with Spencer to find out, could he shed any light on how it was that Bashir had been introduced to Diana? 23 A. Yes, I've obviously thought about this, and I think there are two points to be made. One is, Earl Spencer was not involved at the point -- we are talking about</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>12 six months after -- or four months after the interview. He had not spoken to his sister after he'd made that introduction. We have her word for that. She didn't want -- one of the conditions she made for the interview was that nobody should know about it until she told the Palace, and she wanted to be the one to tell the Palace. That's why it was conducted in this rather secretive way. She certainly -- the evidence we have was she didn't want her brother to know about it because she thought he'd go to the Palace and stop it. So she was very much acting on her own. At that point, we had no particular reason to talk to Earl Spencer. After all, he had said he didn't have anything to say. He'd said that in the Mail on Sunday article.</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
16 Q. That was a statement -- I want to be absolutely clear about this, Ms Sloman. Are you saying that a conscious decision was taken not to ask Earl Spencer for his comments because of what he'd said -- because he'd said he wasn't prepared to talk to the press?

A. No, I think a conscious decision is making it look as if there was some sort of plot not to talk to him. It just didn't seem necessary to me to talk to him because I was looking internally at what had gone on. I was looking internally. Like Tim, I believed Martin, as you know, 13 when we -- we will come on to the 17 April interview, but I don't see -- Charles Spencer was not figured -- all the things he said in the last few months he had not said at the time. We had no way of knowing he had played this major role, as he thinks, in achieving the interview for Martin. We had no way of knowing that. He had kept very quiet, and one of the first points in my summary is, I said I don't think there's any future in this unless he speaks, and he showed no inclination to speak.

Q. Well, he wasn't prepared to speak to the press because, I don't know whether you know this, but the Mail on Sunday had been on to him in late March, saying there were all these rumours flying around and forgeries having been shown to him, et cetera, was he prepared to comment, and he -- this is all documented, it is clearly the case -- decided he was not prepared to speak to the press and he had a very bad relationship with the press.

A. Yes.

Q. So he wasn't prepared. And he told me that he wasn't prepared to speak to the press, but it certainly didn't follow that he would not be prepared to speak to the BBC.

A. He never felt the need to contact us. After all, there was a gap, wasn't there, between the interview being 14 announced and it going out, in which all sorts of things were swirling around. He never said anything at that point. So maybe I should have spoken to him but, at the time, it just didn't seem necessary. It wasn't a conscious decision to sort of hide anything.

<td>15 Paul Donovan is pretty excoriating, really, in his criticisms of that BBC position being taken, that this story by now was of sufficient public interest that the BBC should have mentioned it as a news organ itself and that to say that it was not sufficiently interesting or not sufficiently newsworthy really was really pretty disingenuous. Would you like to comment on that? A. This is all about editorial judgment. It is down to individual editors to decide whether they run a story or not, whether it is about the BBC or something else. It would -- I suggest it would depend on other news stories</td>

I think the statement that we put out says sometimes editorial judgments are difficult, and this presumably fell into that particular category. I think, on balance, the BBC covers stories about itself quite well compared to others. Q. To say it wasn't sufficiently interesting or newsworthy, do you really believe that? Anything to do with Diana and The Diana Interview was of great interest, wasn't it? A. Well, it really is down, as I say, to individual editors to determine that, and it was The Mail and The Mail on Sunday who were focusing very much on this story. There were some followups. But, as I say, it's down to the editors to make that judgment, not me.</td>

Richard Peel transcript of interview on 16 February 2021, 38/22-24

20 Q. We will come to those in a minute. Just sticking with 21 the chronology as we have got it in our bundle, on 22 page 1000, there is a press log of 23 April, 23 Sunday Times, Donovan:
24 "... asked why the BBC had not reported the 25 allegations made about Martin Bashir by Mail on

Lord Hall transcript of interview on 24 February 2021, 66/20-70/7

66 1 Sunday ... in its news summaries and newspaper reviews."
  2 The reply is:
  3 "The BBC is proud of its track record on reporting
  4 issues about the corporation objectively, when it is 5 appropriate. Sometimes judgments are difficult. On 6 this occasion allegations of a potentially defamatory 7 nature, to which the BBC responded, were made by 8 a newspaper. After careful consideration we decided the 9 story was not sufficiently newsworthy."
 10 We know, and there are other examples of this, that 11 the upshot of your investigations and the reprimand, and 12 so on, were not disclosed to the world. I think you 13 have already told me why this is a difficult call, but 14 you really didn't want to tell the world about this, if 15 I have understood you correctly?
 16 A. That's right, yes.
 17 Q. To say that the story was not sufficiently newsworthy 18 was pushing it a bit, wasn't it?
A. These are absolutely not my words. Can I tell you the thing which might be helpful is, Paul Donovan, who I think is the person who instigated this piece, wrote I think it is a Radio Waves column which is in this pack somewhere, saying, "Why haven't they covered this?" When I had read that, and also read this press office log, my thought was that, if, as Paul Donovan was suggesting, there was some edict that says, "You will not publish this", that that's an excuse for BBC's journalist to absolutely run the story. There is a really clear line, and I have been on the damaging end of this many, many times personally whereby the BBC editors and correspondents, but programme editors, will decide what stories they run of the BBC, and, no matter what any person at the middle or top end of the organisation might say, they will do that. So I really think that, even though this had been in the newspapers, the decisions whether to cover it or not would have been at a programme maker's level and, in my experience, programme makers show every desire to show their strength by having a go at the BBC and running stories if they think it is worth it. So it really would have been at that sort of programme level. Programme makers exercise that right, and, if you ask, you know, my judgment, I think they often do it too much and with too much volume, but they do it and it is right that there is a separation between what the management think and what they are allowed to do. I think you've got to be able to report on yourself without fear.

Q. Thank you. I think you're referring to the piece written by Paul Donovan in The Sunday Times on 28 April, which we have at page 1004.

A. That's it. That's right, the Radio Waves piece.

Q. You say in the bottom of the middle column: "... the reaction could not have been more different. No BBC radio (or television) programme has covered the Bashir saga, or even alluded to it in any way whatsoever. It has not made a single news bulletin
... nor has been mentioned in a single review...
The total absence of Panoramagate from the radio news programmes ...
And so it goes on. Just a couple of lines further down:
"The day after The Mail on Sunday's revelations, the editors of Radio 4's daily sequence programmes (Today, The World at One, PM and The World Tonight) found this email message on their computer screens from a senior BBC news and current affairs executive: 'If anyone asks about Bashir, the official line is: 'It's not interesting'."
That editorial line, would that have come from Hewlett?
A. I speculate. I don't know. What I would say is, in my experience, if someone sends you a line saying, "This is the official line: 'It is not interesting'", that's usually when people start wanting to run stories, you know, journalists being journalists.
Q. Not a wise thing to do?
A. Not a wise thing to do, no, in my experience.
Q. Anyway, what you are telling me is that the decision not to cover the story was taken editorially and management had no part to play in that?
A. That's right. That's right.

---   | ---
62    | 4 Q. Thank you for that explanation. The last topic I'd like to discuss with you briefly is the fact that the existence of these investigations, the whole Bashir business, was not, itself, reported by the BBC.
     | A. Yes.
     | 9 Q. You will have seen the article by Paul Donovan in the
A. Yes, I've seen it.
Q. -- at page 1004. What he says, if I can just remind you, he says that there was an exchange with the news people:
"If anyone asks about Bashir, the official line is:
'It's not interesting'."
And then:
"Last week [he said], the BBC issued this statement to Radio Waves. 'The BBC is proud of its track record in reporting issues ... Sometimes judgments are difficult. On this occasion, allegations of a potentially defamatory nature ... were made by a newspaper. After careful consideration we decided the story was not sufficiently newsworthy.'"
Paul Donovan says he is unhappy with that line.

A. Yes.
Q. Can you comment on this, please?
A. Yes, I can. I firstly say this is a difficult issue for any media organisation. I go so far as to say, I doubt there is a media organisation in the world that has reported on its own affairs, often very difficult and sensitive affairs, to the extent that the BBC has, and if my mother were alive, I'd be happy to parade her as evidence about how the BBC covered my time as deputy director-general and director-general because I was subject to its coverage over and over again.
But there is no sense in which there would have been any diktat at the centre of the BBC, if that is what you are fearful of, saying, "You can't cover this story", but it is a highly decentralised organisation. They don't get diktats from the centre. Day by day, sequence editors and television and news have to make editorial decisions and deploy their resources.
I can see from their point of view that -- I have no idea whether it was covered by the BBC at the time.
I simply don't remember. And it may not be true that it wasn't covered by the BBC. But, plainly, there comes a point where -- and we have seen it in the period up to this inquiry, where allegations are made against Martin Bashir, and I don't actually even recall the degree to which they surfaced, but it wouldn't have been easy for a BBC journalist to investigate somebody who was the religious editor of the BBC who works in the same news room. There comes a point where it comes under the "too difficult" heading, but there is no sense in which the BBC, in general, over time, has not reported on its own affairs and there is no sense in which the BBC ever, from a central position, says, "Don't report this story"…

But I can't think there'd be any example where anybody would say don't report on something which is a matter of public interest. I'm very sympathetic to the editors and journalists involved on just how difficult that would be for them.
